Company Profile Arbor Networks' Peakflow appliances ensure the security and operational integrity of the world's most critical networks. Today's sophisticated threats require organizations to have network-wide security to successfully prevent costly downtime, network cleanup, and loss of customer confidence. Security solutions developed by Arbor Networks are built on the proven Peakflow platform, intelligent technology for network-wide data collection, analysis, and anomaly detection. Arbor's Peakflow provides real-time views of network activities, enabling organizations to instantly protect against: DDoS attacks, worms, insider misuse, and traffic and routing instabilities. Arbor's Peakflow protects businesses by hardening their networks from future threats and maintaining business continuity.

Arbor Networks NO. 9
4,650.9% Three-Year Growth
 Revenue: $26.5 million Employees: 110
 Founded: 2000 Lexington, Mass.

What it does: Sells network security software and equipment to major telecommunications companies, including MCI and AT&T. Why it's growing: The Sarbanes-Oxley Act requires public companies to protect financial data, which has spurred demand for Arbor's technology. The software monitors computer networks for hackers and worms in real time, enabling operators to address security breaches immediately. What's noteworthy: Founders Farnam Jahanian and Robert Malan developed the technology using a grant from the Department of Defense's Advanced Research Projects Agency.
